One of our missions is to examine the variation of reflection amplitude with frequency and offset angle. In this study, we have conducted a series of modeling experiments to investigate the behavior of AVO responses in high-velocity layers. Our current physical modeling setup allows us to study these phenomena numerically. By doing so, we are also evaluating the sensitivity of our models to variations in key geological parameters, such as layer thickness and velocity contrast.

References: